Statement from Congressman Miller

Congressman Gary Miller (R-Diamond Bar) released the following statement today:

“Democratic lawmakers in Sacramento are often short sighted in their decision making and rarely take into account the full ramifications of their actions. Unfortunately, this time the residents of Chino Hills are made to suffer.

“In 2002, the Democratic controlled state legislature and Governor Gray Davis mandated that power companies in California begin generating a greater percent of so-called ‘green’ energy.

“This required the power companies to find generally low yielding, niche energy producers all over the state—such as wind farms, solar power plants and biodiesel facilities—and to build a web of transmission lines that crisscrossed the state. So instead of a few conventional power plants and a few power lines, Democrats required that communities be divided, hillsides scarred and vistas disrupted all in the name of ‘clean’ energy—and so a few liberal elitists can feel good about themselves.

“It’s a crime that the residents of Chino Hills are suffering as a direct result of Democratic lawmakers’ short sidedness and ineptitude.

“Where are the politicians when people who have been hurt need them?

“Where are the politicians when these same people suffer loss and the value of the home they have invested in decreases?

“It’s time for Sacramento to be held accountable for the harm they have caused innocent homeowners.

“The good people of Chino Hills who have suffered from the actions of elected officials should receive financial compensation for any loss of equity in their home due to the thoughtless and reckless actions of Sacramento. This is another unfounded mandate on the people of California and the legislators need to be accountable.”
